BNP DEFENDS FREE SPEECH!

and clears-up after Blair's thugs trash

(See page 8)

LAST MONTH over 350 supporters of Free Speech gathered outside Leeds Crown Court to show solidarity with the British National Party's Chairman Nick Griffin, and key BNP publicist Mark Collett.

Nick and Mark were attending a pre-trial hearing, after being charged with offences under the Race Relations Act, allegedly committed during secret filming of the BBC docu-drama programme, The Secret Agent.

They had both spoken at separate private BNP meetings in West Yorkshire during 2003 and 2004, and described their concerns about the threat of Islamification and the disastrous consequences of mass migration to Britain.

An individual working undercover for the BBC was present at the meetings and used covert cameras and microphones to capture video and audio footage of the meetings. This footage was handed to West Yorkshire Police who, in turn, passed it on to the Crown Prosecution Service.

The CPS decided that there was enough evidence and a case to answer. Both Nick and Mark were subsequently charged earlier this year with "using words or behaviour intended or likely to stir up racial hatred." Both now face up to seven years in prison, just for voicing their concerns about Britain's multi-cultural society. Despite the serious nature of the occasion, all the BNP supporters were good humoured. They sang patriotic songs and while they were waiting, sold several hundred poppies, on behalf of the British Legion to shoppers and passers-by. In opposition there was a pro-Government demonstration by Labour Party members and full-time officials from the trade union, Unison. Their numbers were swelled to 300 by students from local colleges who skipped lectures for this opportunity to shout abuse at the BNP and the police. When Nick and Mark arrived at the court they were pelted with missiles by these Labour thugs who also succeeded in hitting the police, the award winning Indian born television reporter, Barnie Choudhury, and the editor of Leeds University's student newspaper. Police made no arrests but a spokeswoman confirmed that video footage of the incident would be viewed to identify the attackers. After Tony Blair's thugs had left the scene, BNP members cleared up the mess they had left behind and then heard a variety of speeches in support of the BNP's campaign to defend Free Speech.

Labour's betrayed Britain's workforce

Job insecurity

BRITAIN'S workforce has the lowest sense of job security than any of 18 of the world's leading economies.

One in four British workers think it is very probable that they will lose their job over the next 12 months and 71% think they would struggle to find alternative work if they did lose their job.

Not surprisingly workers in Japan said they felt the most secure in their job and they were closely followed by South Korea.

Service sector

THE Labour Government claims that the jobs lost due to the collapse of Britain's manufacturing industry will be 'born again' in the service sector.

But that's not the case for the 223 workers at Asda supermarket's Chepstow depot which has been earmarked for closure, or for 170 staff at Travelodge's bookings call centre in Dudley, West Midlands, whose jobs are being 'out sourced'.

Morale in financial services was no better with the Cheltenham and Gloucester (C&G) which is owned by Lloyds TSB, closing its service centre in Warwick to offshore the 350 jobs to India. Last year, Lloyds TSB offshored 2,000 British jobs to India.

"NHS is bankrupt"

NEWS that 500 jobs are to go at the University Hospital of North Staffordshire to save £16 million brought a damning response from a life-long member of the Labour Party.

Pat Powell, the hospital's Unison secretary, didn't mince her words: "The NHS is bankrupt and I am horrified that it is the politicians from the Labour Party that I have supported all my working life, who have put it there."

Even Mick Salih, leader of the Labour Group on Stoke City Council, was forced to admit: "Reducing the workforce will have a massive impact on the services provided."

Defence cuts

NEARLY 2,000 jobs are to be cut from Britain's defence repair and maintenance services.

The Defence Aviation Repair Agency's fast-jet site in St Athan, Wales, will close with 500 job losses, and engine maintenance in Fleetlands, Hants, will also shut with the loss of 225 jobs.

A further 1,226 jobs are being axed at the Army vehicle repair service, with 628 going in Shropshire and the rest from Bovington in Dorset, Warminster, and Colchester.

Defence Secretary Adam Ingram said the cuts, to save £2billion, would "enhance the frontline readiness of vehicles and aircraft."

Media bias EXPOSED!

● Anthony Walker

● Christopher Yates

Two horrific racist murders
Two trials in the same week
One makes all the headlines
One is completely ignored

EVERYONE has heard of Anthony Walker. His senseless slaughter and the subsequent trial of those accused of his killing made television news headlines and front page newspaper stories for days on end.

Anthony, a black lad, was the victim of a terrible racist murder - "He was killed because of the colour of his skin", was the phrase that the media used over and over again.

Very few people have heard of Christopher Yates. His senseless slaughter and the subsequent trial of those accused of his killing didn't even make the television news and was virtually ignored by the press.

Christopher, a white lad, was also the victim of a terrible racist murder. He was also killed because of the colour of his skin, but the media dare not tell the British public about his death.

30 year-old graduate Christopher Yates, a data inputter, dropped a female friend off at a bus stop and then took a short cut home through the car park of the University of East London in Barking.

There he was stopped by three Pakistani Muslims who without provocation knocked him to the ground and began kicking and stamping on his head.

Christopher died of extensive fracturing of the facial bones, caused by multiple kicking and stamping. After the killing the men fled to Yorkshire from where they were planning to flee to Pakistan.

One witness said she heard one of the attackers say: "We killed the white man." Another witness overheard them say: "That will teach the white man for interfering in Paki business," leaving no doubt that this was another racist murder.

New Labour and its agents in the media are desperately trying to keep the lid on deteriorating race relations within Britain. They can only do this by keeping the British people silent. Through the media, the Government has tried to make EVERY White Briton feel responsible for the murder of Anthony Walker, hoping that this 'guilt' will keep the public from speaking out about immigration and its desperate consequences.

New Labour and its agents in the media know that giving publicity to the murder of Christopher Yates would lead to the public questioning Britain's multi-racial society. It would give people the courage to speak out and oppose any further immigration into Britain.

The Government is manipulating news coverage in a desperate last ditch effort to shore up Britain's disintegrating multi-racial society.

"Through the media, the Government has tried to make EVERY White Briton feel responsible for the murder of Anthony Walker, hoping that this 'guilt' will keep the public from speaking out about immigration and its desperate consequences."

TA at lowest strength for 100 years

MORE than 6,000 soldiers have left the Territorial Army (TA) within the past year because of the war in Iraq.

Despite a £3million television advertising campaign, the strength of the TA has dropped to its lowest point since it was founded in 1907.

24,000 troops are fully trained and in practice there are now just 12,000 TA soldiers available to back up the regular army on operations in Iraq, Afghanistan and the Balkans. This is because since Tony Blair embarked on his illegal war against Saddam Hussein, the numbers of soldiers leaving the TA has more than quadrupled.

The war in Iraq forced the Government to issue the first compulsory call-up of reservists from all three services since the Korean war in the 1950s.

Five reservists have been among the 97 British servicemen killed so far.

NOW IT'S OFFICIAL: Immigration does keep down wages

THE Bank of England, in its assessment of the impact of immigration on the workplace has concluded that the arrival of migrant workers is keeping down wages.

The report found that wages were failing to rise because employers were increasingly turning to migrant workers to fill job vacancies.

Each month this year, unemployment has risen, yet at the same time the number of those in employment has also risen indicating that employers are not recruiting from the pool of unemployed Britons.

The Labour Government, through its immigration policy, is keeping down the wages of the low-paid and reinforcing the gap between rich and poor. Low cost migrant labour provides cheaper services enabling the rich to enjoy their lifestyle at a premium but it undermines the indigenous workforce by keeping their wages to a minimum.

This assessment of immigration is backed up by David Coleman, professor of demography at Oxford University. In his paper The Economic Effects of Immigration into the United Kingdom, David Coleman warns:

"The interests of more vulnerable sections of the domestic population may be damaged by immigration and any fiscal or economic benefits are unlikely to bear comparison with immigration's substantial and permanent demographic and environmental impact."

A record number of 582,000 immigrants arrived in Britain in 2004, up from 513,000 in 2003.

TWO-FACED: Tory MP Ben Wallace

Exposing the anti-democratic bully boys

CONSERVATIVE MP Ben Wallace, is spending time, effort and money that he should be channelling into looking after the interests of his Lancaster constituents, for a campaign to bully online payment service, PayPal, into closing the British National Party's accounts.

Wallace has teamed up with Labour Party MPs from Westminster and Labour Party activists from his constituency to pressurize e-Bay-owned PayPal to close the accounts so the public won't be able to join the BNP online or take out online subscriptions to the party's publications.

Apart from being anti-democratic, such antics are underhand and expose the two faces of the Tory Party. At the General Election, Lancashire Online asked Wallace what should be done in the face of the growing electoral success of the BNP. He replied that he would stand up and challenge the BNP on the issues, adding:

"... they are a legal political party. ... they have to have the same rights as any party in Law."

Clearly that was a blatant lie, and now a Conservative MP is working with Labour to try to starve the BNP of vital funds.

BNP Press Officer Phil Edwards, said such an action was indicative of the current malaise within British politics: "We're supposed to live in a democracy yet these people are not tolerant of a legally registered political party."

A spokesman for PayPal said: "PayPal has no evidence that the BNP is in breach of its acceptable use policy."

Tory MP to head Friends of Islam

TORY, Stewart Jackson, is delighted with his new role as secretary of the All Parliamentary Friends of Islam Committee. The MP for Peterborough says he will be playing a key role in encouraging the nation to become more knowledgeable and understanding about the Islamic community and to reach out to Muslims in the community. Jackson admitted that his new post would go down well with the 10,000 Muslims living in his constituency, but denied they would be getting any preferential treatment:

"This is not about positive discrimination," he said. "Muslims are now very much a part of the community in Peterborough and elsewhere."

Only the BNP seems to care about our children in Keighley

by Ralph Ellis

IN THE West Yorkshire town of Keighley there have been allegations that scores of under-age White girls have been gang-raped by men of Pakistani origin.

It is the largest and most alarming child molestation accusation that has ever been made in this country, and it is at times like these that our child protection agencies, like the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (NSPCC), usually come to the defence of the vulnerable.

The message of the NSPCC appears regularly on television, warning that every parent is a possible child-beater or paedophile. Such is the power of their message that we feel guilty about each and every bruise that our children picks up in the playground.

You would have thought that the NSPCC would be at the forefront of investigations into the alleged mass gang rapes of under age girls in Keighley, but you would be wrong. The office of the NSPCC in Leeds had never heard of the problem, the Bradford office knew about it, but didn't know what was being done about it. The London office said they could not comment until they had drawn up a considered response.

So there we have it. When faced with the biggest child-abuse scandal the UK has ever seen, the NSPCC - an organisation that begs for money using every media outlet, supposedly in order to protect our children - appears to have turned a blind eye.

RE-OPEN THE INQUIRY: BNP members demonstrate over the decision of West Yorkshire police to scale down their Keighley child abuse inquiry.

And let no-one be in any doubt that this problem of gang-rapes by men of Pakistani origin is real and not simply BNP propaganda. Channel 4 ran a documentary about the problem, in which Social Services in Keighley were adamant that there was a serious and ongoing child abuse occurring in the area.

During the police investigations into this case one suspect was eventually arrested, and in February of 2005

"This casual attitude to the biggest child abuse scandal in the UK is in marked contrast to the huge efforts that were made by the police to investigate the child rapes on the Pacific island of Pitcairn."

Shabir Ahmed was jailed for indecently assaulting a 13 year old girl. His wife, Shameem Akhtar, was jailed in June of the same year for making 'chilling threats' to the girl in an attempt to get her to drop the case.

However, having made this initial breakthrough the police have now dropped the case. This casual attitude to the biggest child abuse scandal in the UK is in marked contrast to the huge efforts that were made by the police to investigate child abuse on the Pacific island of Pitcairn. Then police officers were sent half way around the world to investigate and charge the offenders, and the case was splashed across every national newspaper.

But in our own leafy towns and suburbs, both the police and the media fall silent. Pakistani men raping young white girls is just too much of an embarrassment to Labour's multicultural experiment.

BUYING OFF THE INVADERS: Paying protection money doesn't provide security, it's just a sign of weakness.

£10 million and rising to promote Islam as a 'religion of peace'

DANEGELD was money paid by the people of England to pay off Viking invaders and save their communities from being raped and pillaged. It's a term that has come to mean protection money, or any coercive payment.

Now, in the light of the London bombings, the Labour Government is hoping to stop any further terrorist attacks by launching a campaign to promote Islam as a peaceful religion throughout the country.

£5 million of taxpayers' money is to be spent on a range of projects, including a special taskforce of Islamic scholars to tour Britain explaining the peaceful nature of Islam, and a National Forum to challenge any interpretation of the Koran that might show it not to be a religion of peace.

A member of the taskforce, Labour peer Lord Ahmed, said the National Advisory Council of Imams would be helped to train "young, suitable candidates who will become our home-grown imams".

Mosques are to be asked to increase the use of English in sermons and mosque committees to include more women and young people.

Mosque leaders will be given training in resolving conflicts to help with the policing of their communities.

Additional funding amounting to another £5 million from the Cohesion and Faith Unit of the Home Office is also available for faith groups and organisations in areas with minority communities, and for multicultural community centres.

Paying protection money can't buy security. To the rapidly growing legion of angry young Muslim men living in Britain today who reject our Christian values and Western ethos, such handouts are just another sign of the weakness of our leadership.

They won't be bought off by anything less than Britain becoming an Islamic state and subject to Sharia Law.

Unexpected Islamic legacy of the London Olympics

AN UNEXPECTED legacy of winning the bid for the 2012 Olympics will be a mosque that will hold 40,000 worshippers built beside the Olympic complex in London.

The mosque will be the centre of the "Muslim quarter" for the Games, acting as a hub for Islamic competitors and spectators, and the new UK headquarters of Tablighi Jamaat, an Islamic 'recruitment' sect.

The new mosque will have by far the largest capacity of any religious building in Britain. Liverpool's Anglican cathedral, the largest Christian place of worship, can hold just 3,000.

Tories desperate for a slice of the Muslim vote

FRANCIS Maude, Chairman of the Conservative Party, was quick off the mark to send his best wishes to Britain's Muslim community at Eid-ul-Fitr, the end of Ramadan.

He said the festivities provided an opportunity for the whole of the country to enjoy with Muslims their great celebration.

Last month the Tories held the first meeting of their new Ethnic Diversity Council. It was established with the help of the Commission for Racial Equality and, under its chairman Mohamed Sheikh, the Council will "engage more closely than ever before the Conservative Party and the ethnic communities of this country."

The move is a desperate bid by the party to attract a slice of the rapidly growing Muslim vote which could well decide the pecking order of New Labour, the Tories and the Liberal Democrats at Westminster after the next General Election.

Causing offence is part of 'enjoying Eid'

A CONVOY of cars draped with the Pakistani flag and with their horns blaring brought traffic in Accrington to a halt as the local Muslim community celebrated the Eid festival.

But the noisy celebrations marking the end of Ramadan upset shoppers because a number of those taking part were wearing Osama bin Laden masks and chanting his name.

"After the terrorist attacks in London, this sort of thing does cause offence", one shopper told the local newspaper.

But this idea was dismissed by a spokesman for Accrington police:

"The Eid celebrations were enjoyed by all communities, peacefully and without any antagonism."

NO OFFENCE: Police say Britons enjoy seeing Pakistani flags at Eid!

SOFTLY, SOFTLY: The cartoon summed up the feelings of many officers.

Police chief distraught over offensive cartoon

A CARTOON in the Police Federation magazine showing officers taking their shoes off outside a mosque, as a bearded man escapes clutching bags of explosives has upset Bedfordshire Police's chief constable Gillian Parker. She claimed the cartoon ridiculed the advice she gave to her officers to remove their shoes before entering Muslim properties. In a letter to the Police Federation Ms Parker wrote:

"The stereotypical portrayal of religious communities in a sacrilegious manner is bound to offend.

"We have worked hard over an extended period of time to achieve relationships and I feel that the stereotypical portrayal of Muslims has unnecessarily jeopardised this.

"Where it is feasible to do so we continue to consider the individual customs of all communities when we enter their homes and places of worship; I make no apology for this." Metin Enver, editor of the magazine, was very contrite:

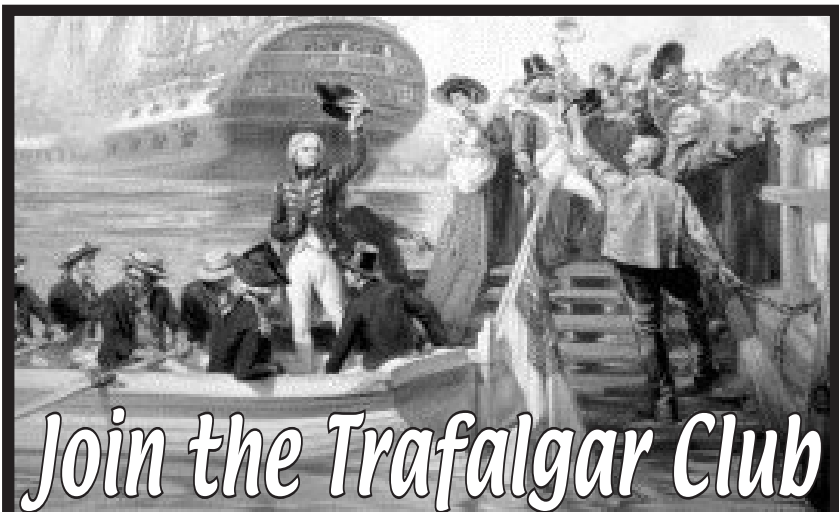

"We do apologise sincerely if the cartoon featured caused any offence to anyone. It was supposed to depict how policing has changed over the years and how the police service takes account of different cultures."

But an officer within Bedfordshire Police said the cartoon summed up the feelings of most in the force.

"Sandie (Gillian Parker's nickname since her shoe removing instruction, after barefoot singer of the 1960s, Sandie Shaw) is so absorbed in political correctness that she's lost her grip on how to police effectively. In Luton, young Muslims now have no respect for the police because they know our hands are tied when dealing with them."

GILLIAN PARKER: A puppet on politically correct strings.

Join the Trafalgar Club

Members of the TRAFALGAR CLUB make a real difference to the British National Party.

They pledge a minimum of £15 a month, in return for which they are entered into a prize draw every month, receive occasional special internal bulletins, and are entitled to attend the annual club dinner free of charge.

In addition every fully paid up first year member receives a TRAFALGAR CLUB tie (or personalised organiser file for ladies). The tie carries the first two 'words' of Nelson's semaphore signal before the Battle of Trafalgar - "England Expects". Second year members receive a fine enamel badge and third year members a specially-designed umbrella.

The TRAFALGAR CLUB is always seeking new members. Please telephone 0870 75 76 267 to join and receive your payment card.

Royal Mail blames Nelson for multicultural Britain

EVEN in the quiet world of stamp collecting, the distortion of our history continues apace.

In commemoration of the Battle Of Trafalgar, the Royal Mail issued stamps in souvenir packs and within the popular Presentation Pack there are examples, of 'Trafalgar-The Legacy'. The first example of this 'Legacy' is 'Global Mobility' and alongside a picture of the first immigrant-laden ship to Britain in 1948, the Empire Windrush, is written:

"After thousands of people from the British Commonwealth and Empire served in the Second World War, ships, such as the Empire Windrush, brought immigrants who transformed British society into a multi-cultural fabric of enormous potential and variety."

Head of Stamps at the Royal Mail is Miss Julietta Edgar, a lady of Afro-Caribbean descent. The majority of the indigenous population of these islands may have a different view to that of Miss Edgar's department.

JUNE 1948: Cultural enrichment for Britain arrives on board the Empire Windrush from Jamaica.

Perhaps the Royal Mail press office at press.office@royalmail.com could further enlighten enquirers to the connection of Horatio Nelson, the Battle of Trafalgar and mass immigration.

ST MARTIN'S: Where murder victims are remembered every year.

Memorial service is too Christian

THE FUTURE of a memorial service to remember murder victims is in doubt because it may exclude non-Christians.

The service at Trafalgar Square's St Martin-in-the-Fields church attracts hundreds of bereaved people each year. But the Home Office, which provides £2,000 funding for the service, has asked for proof it reaches "all parts of the community".

Organiser Sandra Sullivan, lost her daughter Kate, 23, who was stabbed to death in 1992. She and her late husband funded the event themselves when it began 11 years ago.

But now civil servants want it to be 'more inclusive'. An official warned Mrs Sullivan:

"I am concerned that this service could be seen as Christian and could therefore exclude parts of the community."

"Thought must be given to the multi-faith aspect of the service, such as an alternative venue".

But Sandra Sullivan believes it should remain a Christian service:

"I believe it should be in a church because it's spiritual and it's the only way I see my daughter. It's a great comfort for everyone."

Bibles banned from RE lessons about Islam

PARENTS at a Wiltshire school are worried that their children are being brainwashed about Islam in their Religious Education classes. Lessons at The Corsham School are compulsory for pupils who want to take the subject at GCSE and the whole Year 10 syllabus is about Islam.

Pupils are not allowed to bring bibles into these RE lessons and the lecturer uses just one pro-Islamic text book in class. All course work on Islam must use this book as its source and any work using research from other books will not be marked.

One parent, Michael Simpkins, told the local newspaper:

"My son is quite prepared to sit through the lessons because he wants to pass in RE, but there should be some debate allowed."

"Parents should have more of a say in what their children are taught in RE and the way they're taught it."

Britain, at present, is still a Christian country, so schools should concentrate on explaining Christianity in RE lessons. Other religions should be touched upon but not made the main focus of the syllabus.

'Christ' gets demoted

THE EUROPEAN Union has decided on a new grammar rule stipulating that the name 'Christ' must now be written with a lower-case or small 'c'.

Of course, 'Christ', like all other proper names, should begin with a capital letter but politicians in Brussels argue that it is primarily a religious word and doesn't need a capital letter.

Quite rightly Christians, now also spelt with a 'small c', are feeling aggrieved, as Brussels confirms that 'Mohammed' and 'Muslims' are to keep their capital letters so as not to cause offence to followers of Islam.

No more Christmas lights

A COUNCIL is to stop paying for Christmas lights because they are not politically correct.

Waveney District Council in Suffolk says that the festive illuminations do not fit in with its core values of equality and diversity.

The decision followed just days after Lambeth Council in south London re-branded their Christmas lights as 'Winter Lights' so as not to upset the borough's ethnic minorities.

The BNP will give the British people their say on Islam

THE British National Party's newspaper, Freedom, has now launched its 'Thursday May 4th is Referendum Day' campaign in preparation for next year's local council elections.

The purpose of the campaign is to give the public a chance to voice their direct concern over the growth of Islam in Britain.

The editor of Freedom, Martin Wingfield, explains:

"We have had suicide bombers in the heart of London and we are seeing riots across the English Channel.

"But our media and the Government deliberately try to cloud the issue by blaming British and French society and not the terrorists and rioters. They studiously avoid pinpointing the driving force behind these attacks, which is a religion that is alien to these shores and in its latest fundamental form threatens our very way of life.

"A large section of British people feel threatened by the rapid growth of the Muslim population in Britain but at present have no way of voicing this concern. Our 'May 4th is Referendum Day' campaign gives people that voice. Every vote for the British National Party tells Tony Blair of this groundswell of disquiet. "This is a campaign aimed at the 2-out-of-3 people who don't usually bother to vote at local elections. Hopefully by making local election day a referendum day as well, it might inspire these people to actually take part in the election process this time.

"In past local elections where the Lib-dems have done well, in most cases it wasn't because the public had been converted to Lib-Dem policies, it was because they were registering a protest.

"With the demise of the Tories as the main opposition and the movement of all three parties to the centre ground, a vote for the Lib-Dems is no longer a protest vote.

"If voters now want to make their voice heard they should be voting BNP."

An A5 black and white leaflet is now on the BNP website for downloading and reprinting and bulk supplies at £6.00 per thousand are available from The Secretary, P.O.Box 158, Deeside, Flintshire CH5 2WW. British National Party WHERE WE STAND CRIME: A crack-down on crime with more 'Bobbies on the Beat'. Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty for child killers and terrorists. Zero tolerance for drug-dealers and violent thugs.

IMMIGRATION: An end to immigration and the scandal of bogus asylum seekers flooding Britain. Use the billions now wasted in foreign aid to fund generous 'Homeward Bound' schemes to encourage immigrants to return to their land of ethnic origin.

INDUSTRY: British ownership and control of British industry and resources, including the mass media. Protection of British jobs and industry by selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.

HEALTH: We will use the vast sums of money now wasted on funding our membership of the EU for the restoration of an effective national health service and proactive measures to produce a healthier population in the first place.

EUROPEAN UNION: British withdrawal from the European Union. We will trade with Europe where it benefits Britain, but want no political ties or monetary union.

EDUCATION: A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and an end to 'trendy' teaching methods which have failed our children so badly.

ENVIRONMENT: A healthy environment for a healthy people - the protection of our countryside; a ban on greenfield-site house building except in exceptional cases of genuine local need and an end to field trials of genetically modified crops.

FARMING & FISHING: The regeneration of British farming, with the objective of achieving the maximum self-sufficiency in food. The restoration of the fishing industry through protection of our traditional fishing grounds.

GOVERNMENT & COMMUNITY: The establishment of a government that puts British interests first. A return to healthy moral values and policies aimed at strengthening the family and community. Tough penalties for corruption in public life.

FREEDOM: A massive expansion of freedom and democracy to roll back the erosion of our traditional freedoms and truly reflect the wishes of the people. The adoption of popular referenda and high technology direct democracy.

DEFENCE: An alternative defence strategy based on the principle of armed neutrality. No British blood should be shed in conflicts which do not involve British interests. The restoration of the County Regiment system and the reversal of defence cuts which have weakened our Armed Forces and cost thousands of jobs.

REMEMBER! It doesn't matter if you don't agree with us on every last thing. Like all other democratic political parties, the BNP includes some members who disagree with one or two policies. Just ask yourself whether you agree with more of our policies than those of the other parties. Most people do, which is why we are the fastest growing political party in Britain today.

Phonic teaching method would improve literacy

THE PROVISION of expensive one-to-one tuition is the Government's latest silly solution to the increasing problem of illiteracy among British school children.

Education Secretary Ruth Kelly, announced the plan in response to criticism by school inspectors that schools are failing to ensure all children start secondary school with the ability to read and write properly. National test results show that 1 in 5 children leave primary education without having mastered the basics. £120 million will be diverted from the Education Budget to fund this fruitless short-term attempt to paper over the cracks of a clearly failing English language teaching system.

RUTH KELLY: Her trendy teaching gimmicks are failing children.

Clearly Labour's Education Department would rather continue to waste scarce resources than concede that its adoption of a 'mixed bag' of untested, trendy teaching methods has failed our children.

This 'mixed' method has been discredited and should have been abandoned years ago. There is a simple, long-term and inexpensive solution to the current rise in illiteracy amongst primary school pupils - a return to the traditional 'phonic' teaching method.

Civil servants sent back to school

CIVIL SERVANTS working in the Department of Education have been ordered to attend basic literacy and numeracy classes.

Despite Government claims that school standards are higher than ever, Sir David Normington, Permanent Secretary at the Department for Education and Skills admitted being appalled by the inability of new civil servants to pass a basic skills test.

What an indictment of Labour's education policy for the last eight years. The officials in charge of boosting children's academic standards are themselves being taught to read and write, revealing a fundamental problem with the teaching of English and maths in Britain's schools.

SCHOOLS in Yorkshire have been told to display a set of TWENTY-SEVEN(!) posters aimed at teaching children all about Asian food.

Children with learning difficulties need their special schools

by Tina Wingfield

THERE IS overwhelming support among primary and secondary school teaching staff for the re-establishment of special educational needs schools.

A survey published last month by the Times Educational Supplement found that two-thirds of secondary headteachers say some of their pupils should be in special schools and four out of five teachers want an end to the closure of special schools.

The survey comes close on the heels of a spectacular U-turn by a prominent pioneer of the 'inclusion' concept, which led to the mass closure of well-performing special needs schools.

The woman behind the misguided policy of integrating pupils with learning difficulties in mainstream schools, Baroness Warnock, has now admitted that the system she helped to establish is failing both mainstream pupils and the special needs pupils it was supposed to help.

In a complete turn-around, Baroness Warnock argues that rather than teaching all children in mainstream schools, more special schools should be established to effectively

WARNOCK: More schools for children with learning difficulties.

SPECIAL NEEDS: Labour is depriving children with learning difficulties of the chance to attain the levels of progress that small-scale, individually tailored, specialist school environments are proven to deliver accommodate pupils with a range of learning difficulties.

In a polite rebuttal of the current P.C concept that equality is absolute, she points out that, "children are different, and it is essential to acknowledge this, since refusal to address genuine differences can wholly undermine our attempts to meet children's needs."

This Labour Government has championed integration policies and, in 2001, introduced the Special and Educational Needs Disability Act which states that the special educational needs of children will normally be met in mainstream schools. It is adherence to this principle that has forced local authorities to close down dedicated special schools - tailored to meet individual abilities and needs - and, instead, to channel all children into a uniform 'one size fits all' system.

Despite the evident disillusionment of the original proponents of the policy, outright opposition of teachers and a growing body of evidence that confirms the folly of forcing children with special needs into standard environments, Labour intends to intensify its 'inclusion' crusade and continue its closure of specialist schools.

But while the Government applauds its own politically correct credentials, our most needy children will continue to be deprived of the chance to attain the levels of progress that small-scale, individually tailored, specialist school environments are proven to deliver.

Labour's inclusion crusade channels recruits to Islam

by Tina Wingfield

AS IS customary, in the irrational and contradictory world of political correctness, not all children are destined to suffer the consequences of Labour's lunatic 'inclusion' crusade.

Whilst Labour has decimated the special schools sector for pupils with physical and emotional needs in the last decade, it has provided sufficient

DOUBLETHINK: "... to be conscious of complete truthfulness while telling carefully constructed lies, to hold simultaneously two opinions which cancelled out, knowing them to be contradictory and believing in both of them."

George Orwell, Nineteen Eighty-Four.

political and financial support to ensure the proliferation of a certain kind of 'specialist' school.

At present, there are 102 Muslim schools educating approximately 10,000 Muslim pupils and the Government has just announced plans to expand their number dramatically with the establishment of a further 150 new Muslim state schools.

Quite how the pupils of these 'permitted' special schools will be integrated into British society is difficult to see given Ofsted inspection reports reveal that children in Muslim schools spend hours memorising the Koran, gain little appreciation of British culture and tradition, and learn a limited curriculum taught largely in Arabic or Urdu.

In a twist of irony, characteristic of George Orwell's 1984 Big Brother style 'doublethink', Labour Ministers point out that, to ensure full 'integration and inclusion', quotas will be imposed on the new Muslim schools, "forcing them to take 25% of their students from different religious backgrounds."

Now that's a mouthwatering prospect for those teachers looking out for new recruits to Islam.

OFSTED: Children in Muslim schools spend hours memorising the Koran, gain little appreciation of British culture and tradition, and learn a limited curriculum taught largely in Arabic or Urdu.

The decline in teaching European languages

JUST a quarter of state schools are making modern foreign languages compulsory at GCSE, according to a survey carried out by CILT (the national centre for languages).

This decline of European language learning in British schools is of little consequence however because, as CILT emphasises in another report, "the UK has a major linguistic asset not sufficiently recognised in language policy and planning."

9% of our secondary school children and over 10% of primary school children already speak 'community' languages at home, such as Urdu, Punjabi, Bengali, Somali, Turkish, Chinese and Arabic.

The report points out that in the age of globalisation, European languages are of decreasing relevance. It will be "community languages that are likely to be of most benefit for the economy, for trade and for international relations in the 21st century."

Return to the four day week

SCHOOLS in Wrexham may be forced to go on a four-day-week because the Welsh Assembly is axing more than £1m from the North Wales education fund.

Over £6 million has been slashed from the region's overall budget with social services also facing an uncertain future after being told to make savings of £2 million.

Head teachers have warned that such cuts would reduce school opening hours as well as threaten teachers' jobs.

CUTS: Children in Wales face a disrupted education because the Welsh Assembly has cut budgets.

One teacher emailed Freedom: "This will have a devastating effect on Wrexham schools. The curriculum will have to be streamlined, orders for new text books will have to be put on hold and classes will have to be merged. It's pretty obvious what this will mean with regard to academic achievement and pupil discipline."

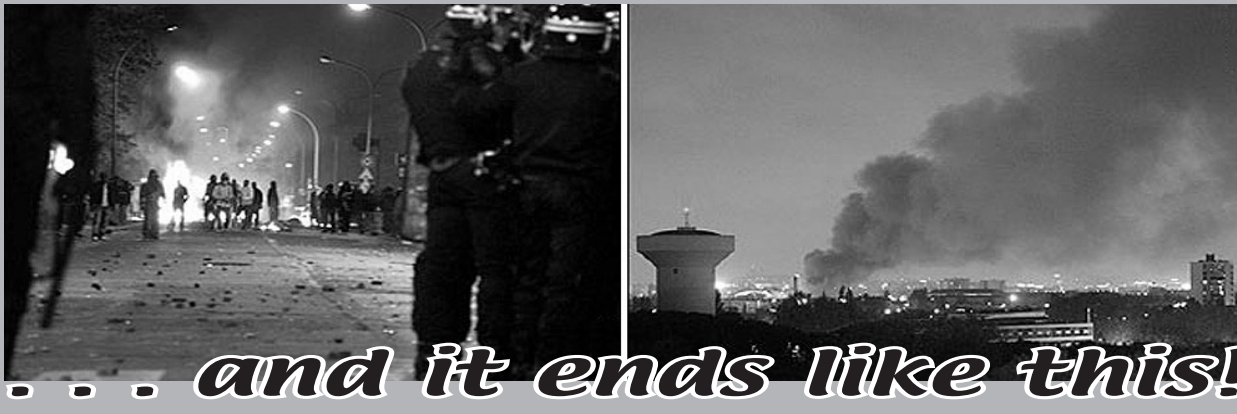

"Isn't it strange that there's always money available for asylum seekers and the ethnic minorities, but when it comes to educating Welsh children there has to be cutbacks."

Environmental disasters will swell the Third World exodus

UN predicts 50 million on the move within five years

by Steve Johnson

FIFTY MILLION Third World refugees will be on the move within the next five years, according to a leading United Nations agency. Many of them driven from their homes due to environmental disasters caused by climate change being made steadily worse by uncontrolled Indian and Chinese industrialisation.

Janos Bogardi, director of the United Nations University's Institute for Environment and Human Security (UNU-EHS) in Bonn, Germany, warned that the next big flood of asylum-seekers and refugees will dwarf those seen in recent years:

"In poorer rural areas especially, one of the biggest sources of refugees is land degradation and desertification, which may be caused by unsustainable land use interacting with climate change, amplified by population growth.

"A second issue is flooding, caused I would say by increasing levels of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere super-imposed with probably some natural fluctuations."

This UN projected figure of 50 million on the move in five years is derived from a number of previous reports, including the 1999 World Disasters Report from the International Red Cross.

This fifty million is only the start. Vast areas of the Third World are being exhausted by primitive farming techniques in an effort to feed more and more people. It is also being turned into desert or flooded out by climate change caused by uncontrolled and ever-increasing greenhouse gas emissions from Third World - especially Chinese and Indian - heavy industry.

As a result tens, then hundreds and eventually thousands of millions of people will be driven in desperate, starving hordes to seek other land elsewhere. Mostly other nearby Third World land at first, sparking off wars over land, water and food which will create even more refugees. But sooner or later they will head for the last islands of food, land and wealth they know to exist in the World - ours in the West. Arriving in ever increasing numbers and requiring all the services available until they become the straw that breaks the camel's back and turn our world into a ruined world, a Third World that has become the whole world. More and more ecologies will collapse and more and more species will become extinct until humanity itself very likely perishes.

The tide of global environmental collapse is rising. It will drive wave after wave of refugees, each wave higher and more desperately driven than the last, to batter against the walls of the West. If we stand firm, and keep them from swamping us, we can survive, and the tide will eventually ebb away, but we must have the will to do this.

Thirty years ago the great French author Jean Raspail, in his classic The Camp of the Saints, predicted the day when the starving Third World hordes would come to take our land from us. In his fiction, we didn't have the will to survive. Liberalism and misplaced sympathy caused the West to open the gates and let them come.

In Raspail's fictional story our civilization died. In our real world we must close the gates, batten down the hatches, guard the walls of the West and withstand this coming swarm if we want to be able to offer our children a secure future.

THE FUTURE?: In Jean Raspail's fictional story our civilization died.

Global market aids bird flu epidemic

IT IS NOW 'biologically inevitable' that tens or hundreds of thousands of Britons will die sooner or later of a mutated bird flu plague. That's what the Government's Chief Medical Officer, Sir Liam Donaldson, told a meeting of 30 top health service officials last month.

He admitted the Government hasn't got enough antiviral drugs to fight the plague if it comes this winter and what is available has been earmarked for 'key personnel' - which turns out to be, in the main, the Labour Party leadership and their civil servants.

The rest of us will get a free 'Protect and Survive' leaflet shoved through our letterboxes, telling us to try not to catch the plague, wrap up warm and drink plenty of fluids if we do, and above all stay at home and don't panic. In other words die in an orderly manner.

Sir Liam says that the threatened global pandemic is just one of those things and nobody's fault if it happens. As he put it, "We can't make this pandemic go away, because it is a natural phenomenon, it will come".

But he is wrong. It is not a natural phenomenon it is caused by human behaviour. Specifically the globalized free market economy and the massive movement of people around the world it requires.

Bird flu is likely to become the latest of a long line of epidemic diseases to mutate and cross the species barrier, finding us a new and defenceless prey. Such diseases are far more likely to do this if humans live cheek by jowl with their original animal hosts in insanitary conditions. This is how our ancestors long ago caught rinderpest and cowpox off the cattle who lived with them in their huts, spawning measles and smallpox.

But that is less likely in the West now. Few Britons spend any time near poultry, still less wild birds. Eggs and poultry are generally well-cooked and subject to public health laws. The chances of the pandemic starting in the West is very low. If we were left alone, we'd be safe.

MUTATE: Epidemic diseases are more likely cross the species barrier if humans are living live cheek by jowl with livestock.

But in the Third World hundreds of millions of people still share their homes with chickens and ducks and eat their produce with minimal care. In Vietnam, for example, raw duck blood is commonly eaten in pancakes, hence people catch bird flu, and so it's much more likely the human pandemic mutant will arise there.

But thanks to globalization, it won't stay there. Every day, millions of people swirl around the world, carried by jumbo jets in a few hours, with no controls or quarantine procedures on arrival. Someone could catch the new pandemic flu in Shanghai and be spreading it in London in less than a day, before they even knew they were ill.

As long as people can go to and fro about the world in millions, uncontrolled, and can travel in a few hours from the heart of the Third World to the heart of London, as long as we are a "one World Economy" we are playing Russian roulette with the survival of our species.

Thirty years ago the BBC drama series Survivors, depicted a flu-like pandemic. It showed the collapse of British society and civilization and the pathetic few survivors left scrabbling for a bare existence in the ruins of a world. The opening sequence of each episode showed it spreading in hours, a few days at most, across the world, a chilling sequence of jumbo jets, airports, and cursory immigration stamps on passports in world capital after world capital.

If we don't escape from the global economy and close our borders to unquarantined entry, Survivors will not just be yesterday's fiction. It will, certainly, sooner or later, be tomorrow's fact.

"The tide of global environmental collapse is rising. It will drive wave after wave of refugees, each wave higher and more desperately driven than the last, to batter against the walls of the West."

Another policeman speaks out over 'misleading briefings'

A POLICEMAN on duty in Leeds on 2nd November has contacted Freedom to express his disquiet over discrepancies between the briefing given by police chiefs to officers prior to the events at Leeds Crown Court and the actual day's events.

"Colleagues of mine who were in the front line controlling the anti-BNP demo have expressed their disgust at the attitude and behaviour of certain Labour Party and Trade Union officials taking part.

"The possibility of there being any violence or a hail of missiles from these protestors was hardly touched upon in our briefing, where the main emphasis was on the need to locate and detain any British National Party supporters making racist remarks or chanting racist slogans.

"Officers were also told to look out for BNP members being unduly aggressive or abusive to black or Asian passers-by.

"The reality was very different. All the aggression and abuse came from the Labour Party protest while the response from the BNP was measured and orderly. The BNP demonstrators were happy to sing the occasional song and talk amongst themselves rather than posing any threat to public order." These revelations from a Leeds policeman confirm that police chiefs are totally out of touch in their current perception of the British National Party and partly explains why the Chief Constable of West Yorkshire, Colin Cramphorn, still talks about BNP marches more than eight years after the party last held one.

It is encouraging that rank and file officers are not being duped by the misleading information about the BNP put out by their politically blinkered police chiefs.

4 Thankfully British National Party supporters were on hand to clear up the rubbish and leave it piled neatly for council workers to remove.

England Expects - the new BNPTv DVD on Nelson

EVEN BEFORE I played the DVD itself I was instantly impressed by the smartly designed cover jacket which announced that BNPTv is very much a professional operation.

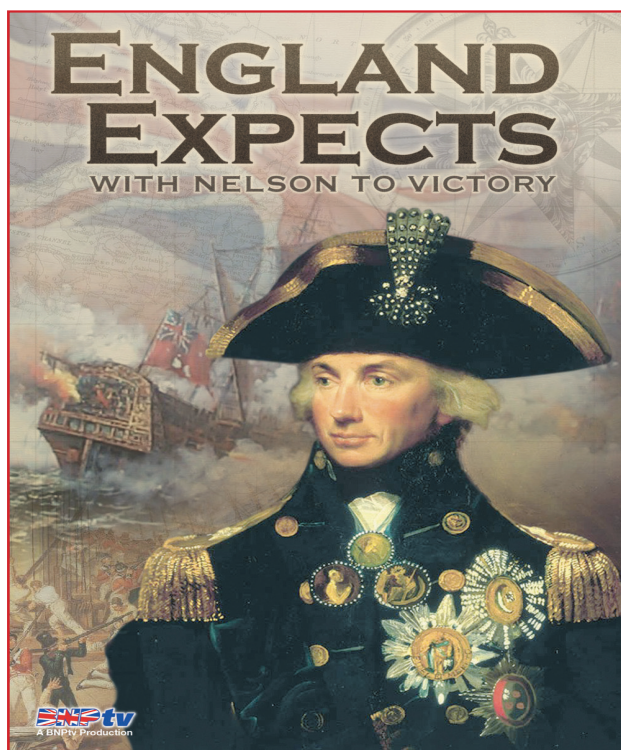

The film which lasts for just over an hour, takes the viewer on a journey through Nelson's life, from his childhood days in idyllically rural Norfolk to his first step on board a Royal Navy ship at Chatham docks when he was just 12 years old, on to the story of naval victory after victory, against Spanish, French and Danes simultaneously making his way upwards along the chain of command. We learn of the young man's bold nature and unlimited courage but we are also given an insight into the naval hero's weaknesses his disrespect for those above him, his repeated bouts of illness following the contraction of malaria while fighting in the West Indies and his scandalous love affair with a married woman.

Much of the filming took place on a splendid English summer's day in Norfolk where presenters Eddy Butler and Nick Griffin make imaginative use of stones on a sandy beach to demonstrate Nelson's naval tactics at various battles. Other parts were filmed on location in London, Chatham and Portsmouth all under a glorious azure sky. The camera work could have been better in a few places and some of the narration could have benefited from editing out some of the "uhms and arghs" but Nelson's story is presented with an incisive and unpretentious style and there are facts aplenty. Coupled with a fitting nautical backing track, which ranges from the boisterous to the tranquil, this DVD would make a perfect Christmas or birthday gift for grandchildren and grandparents alike.

The DVD costs £14.99 which includes postage. Please make your cheque/postal orders payable to 'Excalibur' and send them to: Excalibur, PO Box 116, Leeds LS27 9WW.

Remember, remember the 5th of November

by Mark Reed

AFTER a very busy schedule in recent months with free speech rallies, demonstrations outside court in the rain and an endless round of leafletting, British National Party activists certainly deserved a bit of relaxation.

On November the 5th, Yorkshire BNP again set the standard for the entertainment with its family friendly bonfire.

Those members and supporters who braved the driving rain were treated to a fantastic fireworks display, a huge bonfire to warm cold fingers and toes and an endless supply of fine entertainment provided by some of the BNP's talented musicians. Performers of all ages and styles of traditional British music took to the stage, including the fantastic octogenarian ukulele player and singer with his repertoire of classic wartime songs.

PLASTER: Bradford BNP chairman Paul Cromie, helps waterproof Nick Cass's injured ankle before they brave the weather to pitch the marquees for bonfire night.

The highlight of the evening was when BNP chairman Nick Griffin, threw the guy - Phoney Blair - onto the bonfire. It provided the biggest cheer of the evening as the effigy of the man who took Britain into an illegal war against Iraq went up in smoke.

It was another successful family event organised by the winning team of Nick Cass (despite having his foot in plaster) and his wife Suzy. Thanks is also due to those dedicated helpers who never stopped working to make sure it was a fantastic night to celebrate one of our most famous festivals. Volunteers that included the BNP chairman himself who took his turn manning the catering van, handing out hot dogs and chips to a never-ending queue of children.

Those who inspire our ideology: No.6 Pope Leo XIII

"Working men have been surrendered to the hard-heartedness of employers and the greed of competition."

ALTHOUGH British Nationalism is an ideology which is rooted principally in our own thinkers and ideas, we are not so narrow-minded as to exclude those of other nations and peoples whose ideas march in step with our own. One such was Vincenzo Gioacchino Raffaele Luigi Pecci (1810-1903) better known as His Holiness Pope Leo XIII.

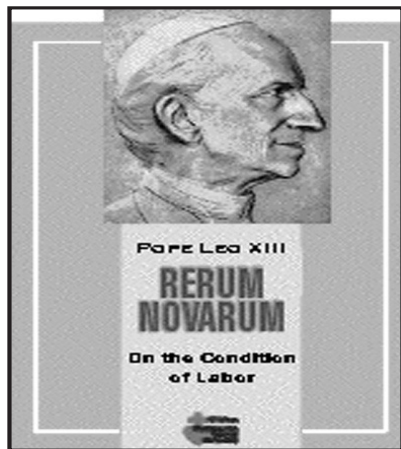

His importance for us lies in his codification of the Catholic Church's teaching on economic and social issues in his great 1891 encyclical, Rerum Novarum. A teaching which is reflected today in the policies of only one British political party, the BNP.

This historic Encyclical opens with a penetrating critique of capitalism: "By degrees it has come to pass that working men have been surrendered, isolated and helpless, to the hard-heartedness of employers and the greed of unchecked competition."

"To this must be added that the hiring of labour and the conduct of trade are concentrated in the hands of comparatively few; so that a small number of very rich men have been able to lay upon the teeming masses of the labouring poor a yoke little better than that of slavery itself."

Since these words were written, capitalism has become global, and even more greedy and ruthless.

Yet, evil as capitalism is, communism, Pope Leo rightly teaches, is no better. "That ideal equality about which they entertain pleasant dreams would be in reality the levelling down of all to a like condition of misery and degradation. Hence, it is clear that the main tenet of socialism, community of goods, must be utterly rejected, since it only injures those whom it would seem meant to benefit."

This was a warning written decades before Stalin and Pol Pot.

The Roman Catholic Church, like the British National Party rejected both liberal ideologies. Founding its Third Way on an understanding of human nature we could not better express than this wise Pope did:

"There naturally exist among mankind manifold differences of the most important kind; people differ in capacity, skill, health, strength; and unequal fortune is a necessary result of unequal condition. Such inequality is far from being disadvantageous either to individuals or to the community. Social and public life can only be maintained by means of various kinds of capacity for business and the playing of many parts; and each man, as a rule, chooses the part which suits his own peculiar domestic condition." But "every man has by nature the right to possess property as his own".

This is the foundation of the ideas later championed by Distributists like Chesterton and Belloc, and today by the British National Party.

As Pope Leo correctly observes:

"Men always work harder and more readily when they work on that which belongs to them; nay, they learn to love the very soil that yields in response to the labour of their hands, not only food to eat, but an abundance of good things for themselves and those that are dear to them. That such a spirit of willing labour would add to the produce of the earth and to the wealth of the community is self evident."

Pope Leo goes on to throw the magisterium of his 2000-year old Church behind our position on the subject of immigration:

"A third advantage would spring from this: men would cling to the country in which they were born, for no one would exchange his country for a foreign land if his own afforded him the means of living a decent and happy life."

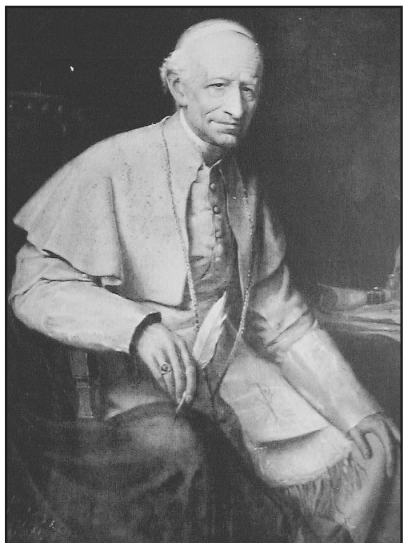

Nationalists who are told that our position on this issue is "un-Christian" could do no better than quote this Papal Encyclical on the subject!

It is those Christians who do nothing to stop the shipping of people around the world in the service of global greed, spreading misery in the lands they leave and the lands upon whom they are dumped without asking the native population, and in the process importing anti-Christian religions, who should question their conscience not us.

The BNP is not a religious or a sectarian party. Modern British nationalism evolved its economic and social policy largely independently of any outside influence in the 1960's and 1970's. But we were happy to discover that others had come to the same conclusions before us. For British Catholics who wish to follow the teachings of their Church, on social and economic issues and indeed on immigration, there is only one party they can in conscience support – the British National Party.

SALLY WOOD

Straight talking!

Rewarding the rioters

THERE HAS BEEN much soul searching in this country over the rioting in France. What could have possibly gone wrong there and could it happen here?

The Guardian of course has the answer to the cause of the unrest: it has to be the fault of the République where 'special treatment' is outlawed, and enshrined within the law is the fact that all citizens are equal.

A noble aspiration one would think and one which certainly worked well when France was a homogenised society, but it seems to be falling apart within a multi-ethnic one. As different ethnic groups vary in their behaviour conducive to success, those that fall behind certainly don't intend to do so quietly; and so in other countries governments have resorted to metering out 'special treatment' to keep the peace.

There has always been a suspicion that special treatment was occurring here and when it does it has to be remembered that the cash comes from just one pot, the government's - and that is our money.

Any extra funding to one ethnic group has to be at the expense of another. One can easily see which particular ethnic group is losing out within our society. It is the one which doesn't complain or riot but struggles to get on with life: it is the white working class.

This was clearly illustrated in a recent Panorama programme which focused on the Rowner Estate in Gosport. We saw the white working class mother earning a pittance at her local Care Home and struggling home exhausted after a 14 hour shift. Her husband meanwhile worked over 50 hours a week just to keep their heads above water.

The Rowner Estate itself has been neglected in recent years. The physical fabric of the building is in disrepair and the lifts don't work. The only government money has been in the shape of a Sure Start scheme for under 4 year olds.

Compare this to the Broadwater Farm Estate in London. This is the estate which saw the notorious riots in 1985 when PC Blakelock was hacked to death. Since then it has received £33 million of government money. It now boasts concierge lobbies and a community police officer. All the blocks of flats have been completely redesigned.

No-one is suggesting that the white working class should take to rioting to become entitled to 'special treatment', but the reality is that the government relies on their support to retain its seat of power and that if that support were to switch their vote to the BNP, the government would very soon become aware of their presence.

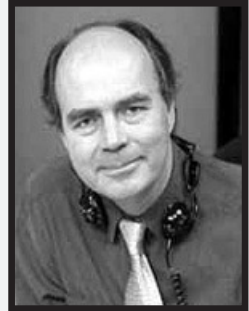

Come on Nick Clarke, show some courage!

RADIO 4's Any Questions programme is where establishment figures are rolled out to regale us with their meaningless platitudes from which we have to glean from those discernible minutiae of difference in their delivery where they stand politically. In other words to discover whether they are slightly to the right of centre, at the centre, or slightly to the left of centre.

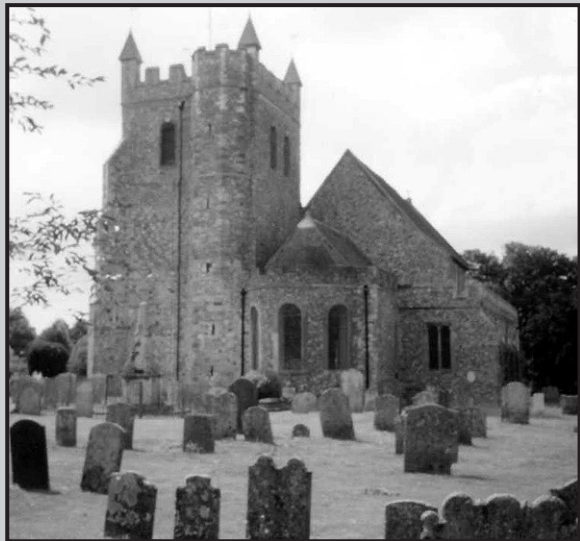

In the recent election in Germany no one party has gained overall control so the two main parties have formed a grand coalition. And why shouldn't they, there is so little difference between them that they might as well govern together. The same situation really applies in this country. It would make no noticeable difference if our three main parties formed a grand coalition. No-one would notice the lack of an opposition as the only dissent to Government policies has come from the British National Party, prompting Blair & Co. to bring in more draconian laws to suppress free speech and silence the BNP.

It makes me smile when I hear Nick Clarke who hosts Any Questions pompously say: 'Let it never be said that there is any area of Any Questions that it fears to tread'.

This is the programme which has never invited a member of the BNP on to the panel. One can only assume that this is for fear of what they might say. Come on Nick Clarke, show some courage. Let's hear from a political party that provides the real opposition in this country today and the only one which does not subscribe to the consensus views that strict media control permits the public to hear.

Please remember us in your Will

MUCH AS we wish all our members a long and healthy life, the fact is that at the appointed time we all have to leave this world and thought needs to be given to the provision of those that are left behind. Naturally those with families will wish to provide for them, but you may also feel the need to leave something behind that will ultimately benefit the Party. Others may wish to leave everything to the BNP in order to fuel our struggle and make success more assured. If you do want to leave the Party something in your Will, or need help in making a Will, please write in for a BNP Wills pack to P.O. Box 1032, Woodford Green, Essex IG8 9GN.

Britain's wind is ideal for energy production

BRTAIN'S wind supply is ideal for generating electricity because its steady stiff breezes enable UK turbines to produce more energy than turbines in wind farms in other parts of Europe.

That's according to an Oxford University study which analysed hourly wind speed records collected by the Met Office at 66 locations across the United Kingdom since 1970. The research also found that Britain's wind was "dependable", and usually available at times of peak electricity demand - during evenings and the winter.

These findings are very good news and if acted upon could see wind power making up 20% of the country's energy needs by 2020.

Wind farms should form a vital part of Britain's energy programme along with other eco-friendly options such as solar power, wave power and biomass fuelled power stations to provide renewable, sustainable, relatively pollution free and carbon neutral energy.

Opponents of wind farms argue the turbines will alter the British landscape. That's quite correct, but not as much as climate change would alter it.

Climate change could see vast tracks of Britain disappear under the sea unless urgent action is taken to boost the contribution of renewable energy and ensure that emissions of carbon dioxide are reduced.

IRISH SEA: The UK's first off shore wind farm supplies 50,000 homes.

Clarecraft pays the price of globalisation

CLARECRAFT: Provided jobs for local craftsmen, woodcarvers and artists.

ABRITISH company has been driven out of business because it has refused to exploit cheap Third World labour and has insisted on its products being made in Britain. Clarecraft, in Bury St Edmunds, made little figurines - the sort often put on mantelpieces and sitting room shelves - and other gift items based on traditional British legends, fairytales and mediaeval crafts.

One of its 'best sellers' was a collection of characters from the Giles cartoon. It was also the official supplier of "Discworld" gift figurines licensed by popular English fantasy writer Terry Pratchett.

For many years it was very successful and provided jobs for Suffolk craftsmen, woodcarvers and artists, but now it has been forced to close.

An official company spokesperson explained why:

"Things have been tough for the British gift industry as a whole and Clarecraft in particular has suffered because we have been determined to keep our manufacturing in Britain." Globalisation forces British business to ship production abroad or face bankruptcy. British industry will never be able to compete against Chinese competition built up on wages one-sixth of those paid in the UK.

The Brain Drain

BRTAIN lost more skilled workers to the global "brain drain" than any other country, according to a report by the World Bank.

More than one and a half million graduates have left the UK to look for more highly paid jobs in countries such as the United States, Canada and Australia, fuelling concerns that Britain's failure to defend its manufacturing, science and university base is pushing highly skilled workers overseas.

First Bus is using Polish drivers to hold down wages

The First Bus company - part of First Group, the UK's largest surface transportation company, has been accused of favouring foreign drivers and causes ahead of the interests of local drivers.

Despite 12 months of negotiations, First Bus drivers are still on a lower wage than drivers with rival companies. But staff are reticent about pushing for a further increase because they fear for their jobs after the company began recruiting foreign drivers.

First Edinburgh have already hired 50 Polish drivers which upset staff as migrant workers have no interest in the current negotiations for improved wages and terms of contract.

Recently the company announced it had donated £50,000 towards the Pakistan earthquake fund, this despite bosses telling drivers that there was no further money on the table.

One driver told Freedom:

"First Bus are only interested in bigger profits. They are holding wages down and forcing local people out in favour of cheaper economic migrants."

Migrants encouraged to settle in the Highlands

HIGHLAND Council in Scotland has diverted funds from its adult literacy budget, which helps Scots tackle their reading and writing gremlins, to start a service teaching English to Polish immigrants.

The decision is a smack in the face for all the Highland communities who regularly receive the parroted "the Council has no funds" when requesting funding or support for essential local services or projects.

The European Union has classified the Highlands as a deprived area because of high unemployment, so the last thing local folk wanted was their council to be offering English lessons to encourage migrant workers to settle.

Foreign takeover

THE takeover of British firms by overseas buyers continued apace in the third quarter of 2005 with 55 companies falling under foreign control.

These included travel booking website lastminute.com by US group Sabre Holdings Corp. and mobile phone firm O2 by Spanish telecoms giant Telefonica. Also taken over is P&O by Dubai Ports World, and under threat is glass maker Pilkington from Japan's Nippon Sheet Glass.

Easington 1951: 'The endless bloody price of coal'

BELOW:
Families at the pithead.
Easington Colliery 1951.
The bodies are brought out.

THE ALARM which signalled an accident underground and summoned miners from their homes to join rescue teams went off in Easington, County Durham just before dawn on Tuesday May 29th 1951.

Sparks from a mechanical coal cutter, working 900 feet below the surface of the local colliery, had ignited firedamp, causing a massive explosion which brought down 120 yards of roof. Eighty-one miners were instantly entombed.

The explosion couldn't have happened at a worse time as the 43 men of the fore shift were about to take over from the 38 stone shift men coming to the end of their overnight stint.

As the first rescuers went underground, the families of those trapped underground gathered to begin a pithead vigil which was to last, for some, for three days, and end in heartache for every one of them.

Of the 81 men trapped only one was rescued but he died from his injuries in Ryhope Hospital a few hours after being stretchered out of the pit cage.

Two rescuers were also killed, taking the death toll of the Easington pit disaster to 83.

On its front page the following morning, the Northern Echo led with the headline: 'Hope Recedes in Stricken Pit'. On an inside page it listed the names and addresses of those whose bodies had been pulled out or those who were missing. There was hardly a family in the town untouched by the tragedy.

In its editorial, the Echo said:

"The Durham miner is a man of sterling qualities. He brings to his colliery not only his skill, but also the determination and the grit which have made him formidable on the

The Easington Disaster

By Fred Ramsey

At the pithead, in the dawn, rescue teams look old and drawn.
Sickened by the last vain search,
where two men died to save a corpse.

Weeping women, mangled men,
can we face it all again?
Yet, we must, for, if we strive perhaps we'll find just one alive.

Down this grim, blast-shattered mine, bodies sprawl where our lamps shine.
Once strong men, once eager boys, lie broken like discarded toys.

Our hopes have gone, our tears we've shed, there's nothing down here but the dead.
Eighty three's the final toll:
the endless, bloody, price of coal.

world battlefields of two wars."

In 1984 the Easington miners showed their grit and determination again when they went on strike for a year in a desperate battle to save their industry from destruction at the hands of the Conservative Government.

But it was to be all in vain. The last coal was taken from Easington Colliery just nine years later and the pit gates closed for the last time on April 30th 1993.

BNP campaign for a Miners' Memorial Day

NO ONE knows how many men and boys have died doing their duty for their country in our coal mines. 90,000 died in mine disasters alone in the sixty years before WW1, and including coal dust related diseases such as chronic bronchitis and pneumoconiosis, the total casualty figure is well over a million.

This Labour Government has just given the police their own Police Memorial Day for officers killed in the line of duty, and the British National Party believes that there should also be a Miners' Memorial Day.

There needs to be a special occasion when the country remembers all those miners who gave their lives miles under the ground, hewing out the coal that was the vital energy source in Britain of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

Women of Britain - Your country needs you again!

THE WOMEN of Britain answered the country's call in an hour of need back in 1939 when these islands were threatened with invasion. Now, nearly seventy years on, Britain's women need to come to the rescue of the country again.

Unchecked immigration, coupled with the high birth-rate amongst ethnic minorities already living in Britain, means that every day that goes by the influence of the native people of these lands is diminishing.

The British National Party must start gaining significant representation on local authorities if it is to assert more influence on behalf of the British people. We have got to win more and more council seats to show that we are an effective electoral force which commands large swathes of support within the country.

Nearly 50% of the British National Party membership is made up of women and we need that represented in the BNP candidates standing at the local elections on May 4th.

Women make the best candidates because they render much of the Labour Party's anti-BNP literature, talking about nazis and skinheads, useless. University students, career women, wives, mothers and grandmothers are asked to come forward in the country's hour of need and stand as British National Party candidates in the next round of local elections.

Women also make excellent councillors as proved by Sharon Wilkinson, who leads the BNP group on Burnley Council helped by two other lady councillors, Patricia Thompson and Carol Hughes, who was the BNP's first ever lady councillor. Pat Richardson is the leader of the BNP group on Epping Council and Angie Clarke represents the BNP on Bradford City Council and Keighley Town Council.

If you are worried about the way our country is heading then please do something about. The more women candidates the BNP can put up on May 4th, the better the chances we have of getting representatives elected.

If you would like to stand in May then please contact your Regional Organiser, or Regional Nominating Officer as soon as possible. If you are not certain who these officials are then please write, enclosing your CV, to: Tony Lecomber, The National Nominating Officer, PO Box 1032, Woodford Green, Essex IG8 9GN.

OPENING NIGHT: There's a packed and appreciative audience for the London Premiere of BNPTV's latest DVD release, England Expects, which looks at the life of Horatio Nelson. The new DVD follows hot on the heels of BNPTV's first production the much-acclaimed EastEnded.

It's an awakening

NICK Griffin's poem for Remembrance Day was very poignant, and I found the verses most moving.

Some years ago I discovered an English composer of music called Frank Bridge, who wrote a haunting and evocative piece of music for the fallen of the Great War called 'Oration'. It remains for me one of the undiscovered masterpieces of our country's music heritage and is well worth discovering. Reading Freedom and Identity is like getting something I've known to be true all my life confirmed. It is heartening to know that other people can put this feeling into words. It is like an awakening, and I'm sure more and more people will realise this too.

John Roberts, Wakefield.

BNP & the unions

I AM new to the BNP and was impressed with the presentation and content of my first meeting at Birstall in West Yorkshire.

I believe that it is vital that the Party starts to win support amongst trade unionists, and in a book that I'm reading I found a most suitable verse for a BNP trade union banner. "Fear ye not your master's power; Men are strong when men unite; Fear ye not one stormy hour: Banded millions need not fight." It was written by Ernest Jones in 1846 and is a relevant rallying cry to those who care about our country in its current plight.

Gary Riley, Huddersfield.

Cremation debate

THERE has been discussion on whether cremation should be made compulsory because of a shortage of land for burials.

Muslims argue that this won't apply to them because their religion doesn't allow cremation. Apparently it is common practice amongst well-to-do Muslim families to buy land and use it as a family burial plot.

With the Government so afraid of causing offence it is highly likely that Christians will have to be cremated yet Muslims will still be allowed to be buried.

Marlene Jordan, Wrexham.

The 'high value' myth

WITH reference to your report in October's Freedom on the foolish remarks made by Digby Jones of the CBI, I can tell you that his idea that Britain will prosper by exporting 'high value' goods is a lot of nonsense.

My generation have heard that story before. When the Americans abruptly ended "Lease-Lend" in 1945, Prime Minister Attlee told us that we must 'export or die'. A few years later, output from the rebuilt shipyards and factories in Germany and Japan were eroding our markets for ships and motor vehicles.

Not to worry said the Board of Trade, we will export high value, new technology items such as nuclear power plants and jet airliners. Well, we never exported a single nuclear power plant and by the 1960s we were actually importing American jet airliners.

L.J. Irving, Plymouth.

Vote in the PCS ballot

I WOULD like to inform your readers that the Public and Commercial Union, which represents civil service workers, is calling on members to vote for the introduction of a 'political fund'.

One reason given is "Having a political fund means we can fight the British National Party more effectively."

Needless to say I have used my vote and voted 'NO'. This country badly needs the BNP to fight for British people's rights, and to campaign for a return to the once proud nation where free speech was so valued.

Name supplied, Cardiff.

Black history month

OCTOBER was Black history month and in Yorkshire over 70 events were laid on to celebrate. Can you imagine the local authority arranging similar events to support an English history month?

They don't even like us celebrating St George's Day!

Mrs J. Dailey, Lancaster.

It's an excellent website

I AM delighted that the British National Party is making the most of the Internet to get across our message of common sense to a public that eagerly awaits it.

More and more people in my workplace seem prepared to bring up topics for open discussion which just 12 months ago would have been whispered about. Subjects such as asylum, anti-white racism and the gun crime which particularly blights my home city.

This gradual defiance in the face of New Labour's spreading tyranny is in part due to the British National Party's presence on the Internet. The excellent and informative BNP website gives the public the courage to speak out about what is going wrong in our country.

Zena Hopkins, Nottingham.

Upper class airheads

AS a student in his final year, I have been appalled by recent events at Leeds University.

Labour Party supporters have succeeded in getting the university to openly condemn the British National Party and to ban any show of support for the party on university property.

They set up a stall to promote their campaign and asked students to sign a register of support. When I declined to sign and explained that I supported the British National Party and vote for the party I was bombarded with abuse.

These upper/middle class airheads have no idea of the real state of the country and need informing of the good work that the BNP is doing in the traditional working class areas that New Labour has deserted.

David Bickerstaffe, Burnley.

Media influence

THIS country can never be a true democracy while public opinion can be influenced by a partisan media that is pushing its own political agenda.

People seem oblivious to what is in reality, just brainwashing. Me . . . I'm not going sit back like everyone else. I'm going to join the BNP and do all I can to help win this country back.

Racist? No, British? Yes.

Tom Ball (age 16), Northampton.

Emma polls 25% in Thurrock

Grays Riverside now a target ward for May 4th

BRITISH National Party candidate, Emma Colgate, polled an excellent 25% of the vote in a tight three-cornered battle for the Grays Riverside ward on Thurrock Council.

The disappointment of failing by just eight votes from overhauling the Tory candidate to finish second, was tempered by the after election analysis which showed that the BNP has a real chance of winning the ward in May. "After checking our canvas returns we have found that quite a sizeable section of our support didn't turn out to vote on the day," a British National Party election department spokesman told Freedom.

"Emma and her team will be making it a priority to find out why this was. Initial soundings show that polling day's main media story might have played a part in this with voters choosing to stay silent for the moment rather than making their voice heard. The very low turnout of just 20% certainly gives

"Polling day's main media story might have played a part in voters choosing to stay silent for the moment rather than making their voice heard."

this theory some credibility.

"Next time it is unlikely that our opponents will have such help from the media and if we can get our supporters motivated, we can certainly win this seat."

In another ward in Thurrock, Homesteads, John Cotter polled a very encouraging 10% and in Felling ward for Gateshead Council Keith McFarlane, beat the Tory in a safe Labour seat with 8% of the vote.

With most councils having a six month moratorium on elections prior to the big showdown on May 4th, all BNP branches and groups should now be working hard towards the all-important day.

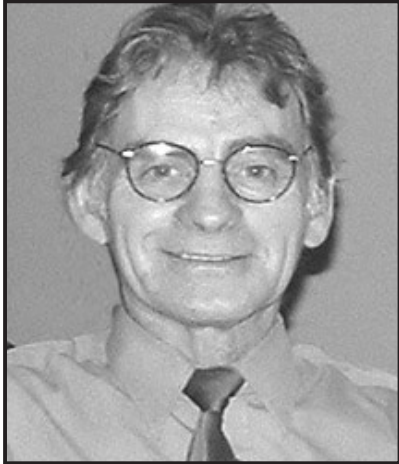

Huddersfield BNP prepare for May 4th

LOCAL elections were the hot topic when over 60 people attended a meeting in a new venue in Huddersfield to listen to Councillors David Exley (Kirklees) and Geoff Wallace (Calderdale).

They informed the audience, many who were "first timers" about their activities in council and the importance of public support to increase the number of BNP councillors.

A number of prospective candidates for the Kirklees wards, some of whom made their maiden speeches to a public audience and demonstrated their knowledge of local affairs, were introduced and a committee to support these brave individuals in the face of what will be a concerted campaign of hostility from the media was elected. The collection raised £244.44.

A follow-up meeting for the next week was booked for members of the audience who pledged their support to help form leafleting teams - an objective of the meeting. BNP support in Huddersfield has grown to such an extent that a group has been formed.

Matt wins his case

AT Southend Magistrates Court, BNP candidate Matt Single, faced public order charges after he was attacked by Labour Party thugs outside a BNP meeting.

Matt was arrested by police when he defended himself and was charged with ABH which was later dropped to a Section B Public Order offence. After hearing the evidence provided by a dozen witnesses, the magistrates stopped the proceedings, concluding that Matt had no case to answer. "I am delighted with the result," Matt told Freedom. It's a psychological boost which signals that we are not only winning the hearts and minds of the British people on the street, we can also win in court against the enemies of free speech."

London conference paves the way for more 'people power' within the BNP

ONE HUNDRED and thirty BNP organisers, fund-holders and key personnel attended a conference held in central London at the end of November.

The purpose of the conference was to discuss involving more people in the party's decision-making processes and BNP Chairman Nick Griffin, opened proceedings by explaining why this was necessary and why the party needed constitutional reform.

Lee Barnes from the BNP's Legal Department then explained why the BNP was an ethno-nationalist party and why it was vital to stay that way.

There was a motion on the energy crisis: "This conference believes that the looming fossil fuel energy crisis makes it necessary for BNP energy policy to include the construction of a new generation of nuclear power plants, using the safest possible modern technology to generate the power needed to run a core network of essential services."

This was passed with a clear majority but a substantial minority against it.

There was a motion on constitutional

FAMILY VALUES: There was a call for a 'family wage', for mothers who wished to stay at home and raise pre-school children. But this would only be available to traditional two-parent families.

law: "This conference believes that Common Law should take precedence over any parliamentary act. Successive governments which have all taken an Oath of Allegiance to uphold the traditional laws and customs of this land have passed many laws which contravene Common Law and which are therefore unconstitutional, illegal and void."

This was passed with a clear majority although there was a solid minority against it and several abstentions.

There was a motion on abortion: "This conference believes that the BNP should oppose social abortion." This was passed by an overwhelming majority and gave rise to an additional, related motion: "This conference believes that the BNP should oppose the promotion of social abortion, and campaign for a mothers' wage."

This was also carried by a substantial majority.

Discussions on this secondary motion led to the idea that, as a party committed to family values, the "mothers' wage" proposal should be changed to call for a "family wage". Payments for mothers who wished to stay at home and raise pre-school children would go only to traditional two-parent families, thereby acting as a strong social and practical financial incentive for this ideal and fundamental building block of a healthy society to stay together.

After a buffet lunch there were two further motions plus a closing speech by Nick Griffin.

In a powerful address, the BNP leader discussed various little-publicised opinion polls and other straws in the wind which indicate the huge potential the party now has for mass public support. He then went on to explain that channelling and harvesting that support would require "a hundred-fold increase in our organisational effectiveness".

Scarborough BNP now have a stall in the town centre selling 'Freedom'

OVER 40 members and supporters of Scarborough British National Party turned up to the latest meeting held on the East Coast of Yorkshire. This was the biggest turn out so far for the fledgling group and goes to show how the hard work being done in and around the Scarborough area is paying dividends.

Scarborough Organiser Ian Dawson, started the meeting by contrasting the media silence over the violent deaths of a number of white individuals at the hands of ethnic minorities with the non-stop media coverage of the Anthony Walker case.

Ian said that it was clear that the only way to get the names of these murdered Britons into homes the length and breadth of Britain was to create our own media.

"With both the BNP website and Freedom we have two potentially massive mediums to get our message across - and by selling Freedom on the streets of Scarborough that is exactly what we have been doing. There is now a weekly stall in the town centre selling Freedom to the public as well as regular leafleting sessions," he told the audience.

Yorkshire regional Organiser Nick Cass, talked about the problems faced in his home town of Dewsbury and how after recent events, the town is like a time bomb. He went on to mention the case of a teenage girl from Rotherham stabbed to death by an Asian and the media engineered silence about the murder - all in the interest of good community relations. A collection raised £320 before it was the turn of guest speaker Jackie Griffin, to address the audience. She thanked the local BNP for helping to support her husband at his recent 'Free Speech' hearing in Leeds and then went on to explain why we should not waste our money on the media hyped

'charity begins in Africa' Children In Need charade but should help out our own Children In Need.

As well as looking out for our own children, Jackie pointed out how 4000 senior citizens died from the cold in Yorkshire alone last year - all because they could not afford to heat their homes properly. She asked all those present to check up on our old people who live nearby to make sure they have enough to get them through what is expected to be a very cold winter.

BNP students stand up to NUS bullies

IN the campaign for election to the Student Union for Manchester University last year, BNP student Joseph Finnon, won 118 first preference votes which was 5% of the total cast.

After a complaint from a Labour Party supporter over Joe's high profile campaign on campus, he was summoned before a UMSU Disciplinary Meeting, where he had to defend his right to stand and argue against the Student Union's 'No Platform for the BNP' policy. The Disciplinary Committee met on 20th April, and then again on 4th May but could not reach a decision on the matter. For the last five months Joe Finnon has pressed the Union for a ruling regarding the complaint.

"I believe that the actions of the Student Union are discriminatory against me because I am a student who supports the BNP," he told Freedom. "Had I been anybody else in this Union, the matter would have been resolved immediately and I would not have been kept waiting until a new term."

"I believe that no BNP student, or any student for that matter, should be discriminated against in such a way by the Union claiming to represent them. I am willing to offer my services to any students who find themselves in a similar situation."

Joe Finnon can be contacted by email: students@bnp.org.uk

■Diane Stoker, who is studying at Manchester Metropolitan University, has had her suspension from the Students' Union lifted after successfully appealing against the decision to suspend her because of her BNP membership.

128 'Freedoms' sold at Nottingham street sales

LAST month saw another meeting of Nottingham BNP at a venue in the city centre.

East Midlands Regional Organiser, Sadie Graham, opened proceedings and thanked the members and supporters for turning out.

Sadie, who is acting Nottingham Group Organiser until a new organiser is appointed, outlined the many activities currently being carried out in and around Nottingham, particularly highlighting the weekly evening leafletting sessions and the success with the regular weekend street papersales.

A recent papersale in Kirkby sold over 100 copies of Freedom and in Bulwell 28 copies of the paper were sold in just over an hour.

Sadie declared that the campaigning for the May 2006 elections had already starting and urged potential candidates to come forward to discuss this with her. She also spoke about the establishment of a Skills List for professional and trades people within Nottinghamshire who are members. She also announced the forthcoming meeting and social evening for the new Burton-on-Trent group.

Simon Darby, the deputy leader of the BNP was guest speaker and he addressed some current political issues including the disturbances in Birmingham and across France. He expressed how important it was that more people help out in the Nottingham area running up to May's local council elections and said that in Birmingham, the BNP were hoping to contest at least 40 wards.

Margaret exposes politically correct censorship in her local newspaper

BLACKBURN BNP's 'Letter of the month' is Margaret Tappenden-Cousins, who received a bottle of wine from her colleagues for getting part of her letter printed in the local press.

Margaret's missive successfully exposed the government inspired censorship carried out by local editors working on provincial newspapers.

Her gripe was, that the Lancashire Evening Telegraph had carried a report that the graves of the East Lancashire soldiers killed in the First World War and buried at the Albuera cemetery, near Arras in France, had been vandalised, but that the report failed to mention the authorities believed it to be the work of Muslim extremists.

Margaret wrote to the editor: "I was deeply distressed to read in the LET that British War Graves belonging to soldiers from East Lancashire killed in the First World War have been desecrated in France. My Uncle was killed during this war, so that we could live in a free society.

"I was further upset, that you did not mention that the authorities believe this attack to have been carried out by Muslim extremists."

"In this same edition of the LET, you carry an article and editorial comment, that 'race hate crimes' in Lancashire have trebled since the London bombings.

"I think it would have been revealing to highlight this, 'hate crime' against our war dead and their memory, whilst you were discussing the subject as this would have given your readers another perspective of the problem.

"A British soldier and his war grave in France is no less sacred than an individual or mosque in England." True to New Labour's politically correct censorship, all that the Lancashire Evening Telegraph printed of Margaret's letter was the first paragraph, the rest was ignored.

The British National Party RECRUITMENT LEAFLETS

£8.00 for 1,000

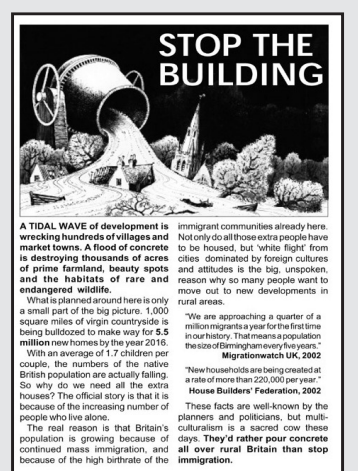

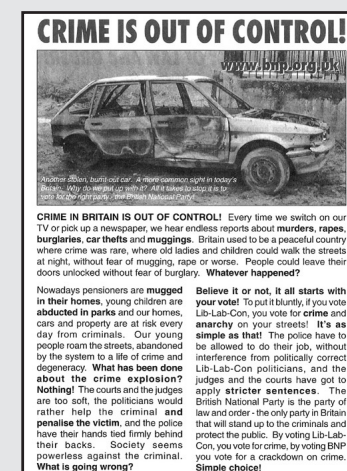

IMMIGRATION? OPEN YOUR EYES
This hard-hitting anti-immigration leaflet draws attention to the alarming statistics that show that Britons will be a minority in their own country by 2060.

BUILDING A FUTURE FOR OUR CHILDREN
Links the BNP's election success in Burnley with our policies on law & order and immigration. Also includes details of membership and the BNP's publications.

IF ONLY I COULD SEEK ASYLUM
Make no mistake, asylum seekers are invading our country. Arriving at a rate of 300,000 a year, it's costing us £1.5 billion annually to look after them.

KEEP OUR CHILDREN SAFE
"These children would be alive today if our spineless politicians had the guts to declare war on paedophiles," says this powerful leaflet condemning child abusers.

CRIME IS OUT OF CONTROL
With soaring crime rates hitting inner city, suburban and rural areas alike, this leaflet outlines the BNP's 'zero tolerance' stance in combatting crime.

STOP THE BUILDING!
Under Labour, as with the Tories, Britain's greenbelt land is being built on at a frightening rate. We look at the people and companies behind this rural destruction.

FROM: The Secretary, P.O.Box 158, Deeside, Flintshire CH5 2WW.
POSTAGE: £6.91 for 1,000, £7.54 for 2,000. Cheques/POs to 'British National Party'.

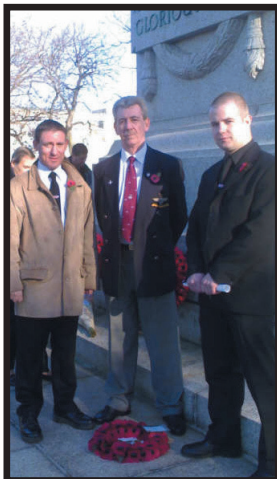

We remember those who gave their lives for our country

Members of Nottinghamshire BNP attended the Remembrance Day service at the Cenotaph next to the River Trent and laid a wreath on behalf of the party for those who gave their lives in both World Wars.

Les Robson lay a wreath from Morley BNP at the local Cenotaph. Mr Robson saw action in Palestine and also took part in the D-Day landings.

Sunderland BNP (left) pay their respects to our lost heroes by laying a wreath at the Cenotaph.

ON SUNDAY 13th November, British National Party members attended services for those who lost their lives for this country. Each year the BNP delegations at these ceremonies get larger and are seen by more members of the public. Each year in the run up to Remembrance Sunday, more and more BNP members are becoming involved in selling poppies to raise money for the Royal British Legion.

The Cenotaph at Coronation Gardens in Dudley was where the local BNP branch laid its wreath.

BNP members in Leicestershire again gathered at two locations in the county to lay wreaths in Remembrance. Andy Holders laid one in Loughborough as did Mike Robinson (above) in Hinckley.

Coventry and Warwickshire BNP made its annual pilgrimage to the city's War Memorial Park to lay a wreath on behalf of the British National Party.

Please help us prepare for the 2006 local elections

NEXT YEAR is a very important year for the British National Party and that is why we need to be up and running on January 1st, ready to take our 'Referendum Campaign' for the May 4th local council elections to the British people.

Usually during the months of January and February, BNP administration staff and organisers are snowed under processing the avalanche of BNP membership renewals that come in during these first two months of the year. This means that our local election campaigning doesn't really get started until the beginning of March, so in many cases full leafleting and canvassing of the wards we are contesting is not always completed. This year we would ask as many BNP members as possible to renew for 2006 this month.

If you can help us in this vital task it will mean that the huge workload expected at the beginning of the year can be tackled earlier. It also means that vital funds needed for the local elections are in place so that leaflets, posters and other campaign material can be prepared and printed at the earliest opportunity, rather than in March.

The public are very worried about the growth of Islam in Britain but Labour, the Tories and the Liberal Democrats are too frightened of losing the Muslim vote to echo these concerns. The British National Party is the only party brave enough to speak out about the threat posed to our Western and Christian values by this Middle-Eastern based fanaticism.

Freedom is producing leaflets and posters to make voters aware that May 4th 2006 is their chance to voice their concern on the growth of Islam in Britain. Our Referendum Day campaign material needs to start going out in January and YOU can help us to do this by renewing your BNP membership today.
